

THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW

NOW IN OUR 125TH YEAR

BUILDERS
AND LEADERS

Collect free Northwest Trader™ trading cards, compliments of The Spokesman-Review. This series features the visionary men and women who helped define our city. Collect them all! Look for more cards in The Spokesman-Review.

BUILDERS AND LEADERS

125TH YEAR
SERIES

The subjects of the bronzes were chosen by the newspaper. The choice of subjects was designed to provide viewers with launch points for discussion of long-standing local issues relating to economic development, the environment, social justice, ethnic diversity and media. At the time of the installation, a newspaper spokesman noted that, "Ultimately, the final selection of honorees in a display of this type is going to be somewhat arbitrary—but, in the end, we think the people chosen exemplify a wide range of experience, vision, expertise, compassion and hopefulness about the future."

The newspaper conceived the installation as a complement to a display of more recent leaders in the lobby of the Chamber of Commerce building, and to other public sculptures in downtown Spokane, including a bronze of Louis Davenport in the lobby of the Davenport Hotel.

Photo credit: Jeanne McMenemy

Text credit: Shaun O'L Higgins

Design: Hanna & Associates and Don Walls

Item 1 in a series of 52 commemorative items published in commemoration of the 125th year of publication of The Spokesman-Review, 2007-2008.

JAMES N. GLOVER
1837-1921

DEVELOPER, MAYOR,
"FATHER OF SPOKANE"

125TH YEAR
SERIES

James N. Glover, an early land developer, envisioned and promoted Spokane's potential as a regional center. He served as mayor of Spokane from 1883-1885 and is often called "The Father of Spokane."

THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW Collector Cards 2007 A1

WILLIAM H. COWLES
1866-1946

PUBLISHER, BUSINESS LEADER, PHILANTHROPIST

125TH YEAR
SERIES

William H. Cowles invested in an early Spokane newspaper called The Spokesman, a competitor to the previously established Review. In 1893 he acquired his rival and then merged it to form The Spokesman-Review. A major business leader, he invested in many local concerns, supported civic and cultural organizations and established two local foundations.

THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW Collector Cards 2007 A2

PETER B. BARROW
1840-1906

PASTOR, ENTREPRENEUR, PUBLISHER

125TH YEAR
SERIES

Peter B. Barrow was a pioneer minister and also edited one of Spokane's first and more successful newspapers. He was instrumental in founding a commercial farm at Deer Lake for the purpose of providing a livelihood for local African-American workers. Before coming to Spokane, Barrow had served in the Mississippi legislature during the Reconstruction period.

THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW Collector Cards 2007 A3

MAY ARKWRIGHT HUTTON
1860-1915

MINE OWNER, RIGHTS ACTIVIST, PHILANTHROPIST

125TH YEAR
SERIES

May Arkwright Hutton was a convention-flouting mine owner, women's rights activist and philanthropist. In 1901, she and her husband Levi "struck it rich" in North Idaho's Hercules mine. In 1906, they moved to Spokane and established or provided major support to institutions and charities aiding women and children in need.

THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW Collector Cards 2007 A4

JAY P. GRAVES
1859-1948

RAILROAD AND MINE DEVELOPER,
COLLEGE BENEFACTOR

125TH YEAR
SERIES

Jay P. Graves was a mine developer, founder of the Spokane and Inland Empire Railroad and a major early benefactor of Whitworth College. His landmark North Spokane home, Waikiki, designed by architect Kirtland Cutter, now serves as a retreat and meeting site for Gonzaga University

THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW Collector Cards 2007 A5

SPOKANE GARRY
1811-1892

TEACHER, CHIEF OF THE SPOKANES,
RIGHTS ADVOCATE

125TH YEAR
SERIES

As a chief of the Spokanes, Garry was an articulate and effective advocate for Native American rights. As a boy, he was sent by the Hudson Bay Company to receive a western education from Church of England missionaries at Fort George in Canada's Red River country. After six years there, he returned to the Spokane area and soon established the first school in the Inland Northwest, teaching agriculture, English and religion.

THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW Collector Cards 2007 A6